Call for Participation to the National Seminar Workshop on Values Education

On Pedagogies in Teaching Values in School

Values education is known internationally by a number of names, including moral education and character education, among others. Each variant has a slightly different meaning, pointing to one or other distinctive emphasis. Each variant is nonetheless united in the common belief that entering into the world of personal and societal values is a legitimate and increasingly important role for teachers and schools to play. This session is geared towards better understanding of how Values can be taught beyond the classroom ushering to borderless education.

Values Education and Philosophies of Education

This session aims to present how various philosophies of education can create meaningful impact in Values Education. It is a key tool for teachers and educators in the field of character and faith formation. It will respond to the specific needs and provide key knowledge, skills and tools for ethics and values education. It consists of theoretical background, conceptions and approaches to ethics and values education. It will provide key theories and insights from the moral development of children and some reflections on relationship and ethics management.

Integrating Values Education in all disciplines

Values Education goes beyond the classroom. The session will provide opportunity to share best practices on social involvement and service program for basic education. This will respond to needs of 21st century learners, a program on social concern and involvement seeks to deepen social awareness and intensify the passion for social involvement among students in order to create positive impact among marginalized communities. Community involvement initiatives provide students with opportunities that can help develop and integrate the personal, academic, socio-cultural, and spiritual dimensions that comprise each student's person.

Positive Student Discipline: Turning classroom into home

When children fail to succeed, the whole community is harmed. Keeping students engaged in the classroom is fundamental to academic success. The use of punitive discipline practices that rely on suspension, expulsion, and other harsh consequences—often applied disproportionately to minority students—undermine the goal of success for all. In this session the participants will be lead to better understand and practice positive student discipline. It will present a comprehensive approach that uses discipline to teach rather than punish and, as a result, helps students succeed and thrive in school. Educators hopefully will use these approaches that promote positive student behavior while preventing negative and risky behaviors.
